Missingness and notable patterns

No explicit missing values or duplicate (country_iso3, indicator_code, year) combinations were identified in the source records. However, temporal coverage varies considerably across indicators, and some entity–indicator–year combinations are absent.

For each indicator, the number of absent entity-year observations is calculated as (number of entities × number of years in the indicator's observed min–max interval) − observed rows. These gaps are quantified in the table above and represent missing combinations relative to a complete annual grid, rather than NULL values in existing records.

Indicators have different starting years: employment indicators begin in 1991, GNI per capita in 1962, and GDP growth in 1961. Some indicators provide complete coverage within their respective observed periods, while others contain substantial gaps.

Five indicators have a complete annual panel across all 16 entities within their observed min–max periods: all three employment measures (1991–2025), life expectancy (1960–2024), and urban population share (1960–2025). Other indicators have absent entity-year combinations, as quantified in the table.

The dataset includes indicators expressed in different units, such as percentages, current US dollars, and years. These differences should be considered when comparing indicators or integrating multiple data sources.
